

Tip 11: Build Strong Relationships With Other Teams

- Others around you can benefit from liaison between you and them with the benefit being mutual

- Liaise with other scrum teams and allow them to do the same

- It would be mutually favorable for you and the other teams if you worked together or merely discussed scrum issues together

- You can improve based on their experiences as well as share solutions to common technical or non-technical problems

- Promoting and encouraging relations between your team and other teams, Scrum Masters, and Product owners will help your team become better

- By working on scrum projects, you become a part of the scrum community where obtaining and giving help is a significant part of the process

In Summary

- Collaboration is mutually beneficial; promote and encourage collaboration of ideas and technical/nontechnical solutions between your team and other teams
- Associations with other scrum masters and teams will help you grow professionally in your Scrum Mastership

In Summary

- Collaboration is mutually beneficial; promote and encourage collaboration of ideas and technical/nontechnical solutions between your team and other teams
- Associations with other scrum masters and teams will help you grow professionally in your Scrum Mastership
- Scrum takes care of its own; you can only receive scrum mentorship through reaching out to others and letting them reach out to you as well