

Tip 6: Be a Collaborator

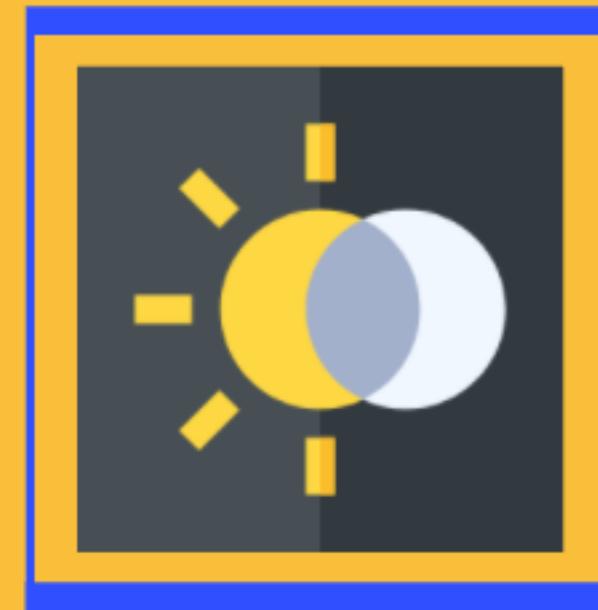

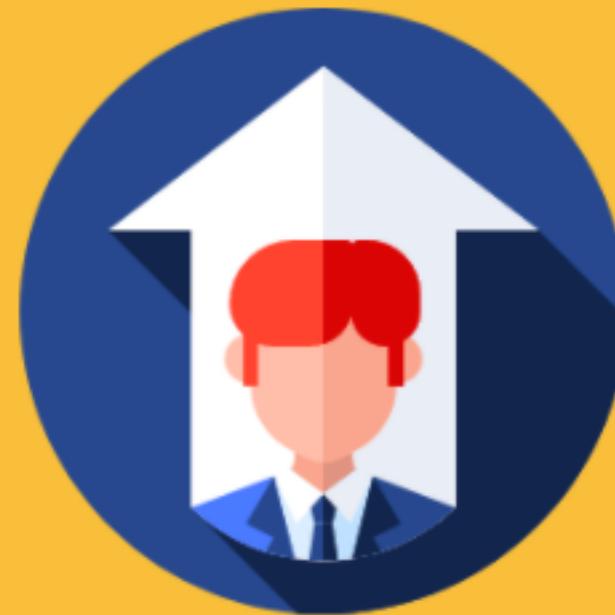

- You should collaborate effectively with both the product owner and the developers for the betterment of the development process

- You must collaborate with the team in regards to giving them the guidance they need
- Collaborate with the product owner on issues pertaining to the grooming of the product backlog and team dynamics

- Collaboration is something you have to choose to do
- It takes effort to get to know your product owner's character, strengths and weaknesses

- It will allow you to collaborate most effectively and build a strong relationship for the good of the team

- Start by mastering how to assist with the product backlog in order to help your PO

In Summary

- To become an effective Scrum Master, collaborate with those on your team
- Teamwork is essential to giving guidance to the developers
- No one can force you to collaborate; it is an individual choice. Even if you are not collaborative by nature, practice collaboration and perfect it because you need it

In Summary

- To become an effective Scrum Master, collaborate with those on your team
- Teamwork is essential to giving guidance to the developers
- No one can force you to collaborate; it is an individual choice. Even if you are not collaborative by nature, practice collaboration and perfect it because you need it
- Forge a great relationship with both the Product Owner and the team