

Tip 4: Be As Scrummy As the Organization Permits

Know your employer

- The organization may be able to (or think it can) profitably exist without scrum

- Make a reasonable strong case, and if it is becoming too tense, let it go (or wait for another good opportunity)

- A professional woman with blonde hair tied back, wearing a light blue button-down shirt, stands in an office environment. She is looking down at a stack of papers she is holding in her hands. In the background, there are large windows showing greenery outside, and other office workers are visible at their desks. The overall atmosphere is one of a busy, modern workplace.
- Use your gut feeling here
 - That does not give you the right to derail programs already in place

- The best teams and companies started with a single step of change

In Summary

- When there is a point of conflict between scrum and your organization, make a strong case, then if it is becoming too tense, follow the organization's way
- As team protector, try to explain the scrum situation, but if it is not working, leave it for a better time

- Remember to make changes in baby steps and you will achieve a lot more over time
