

Tip 14: Respect Your Team's Space

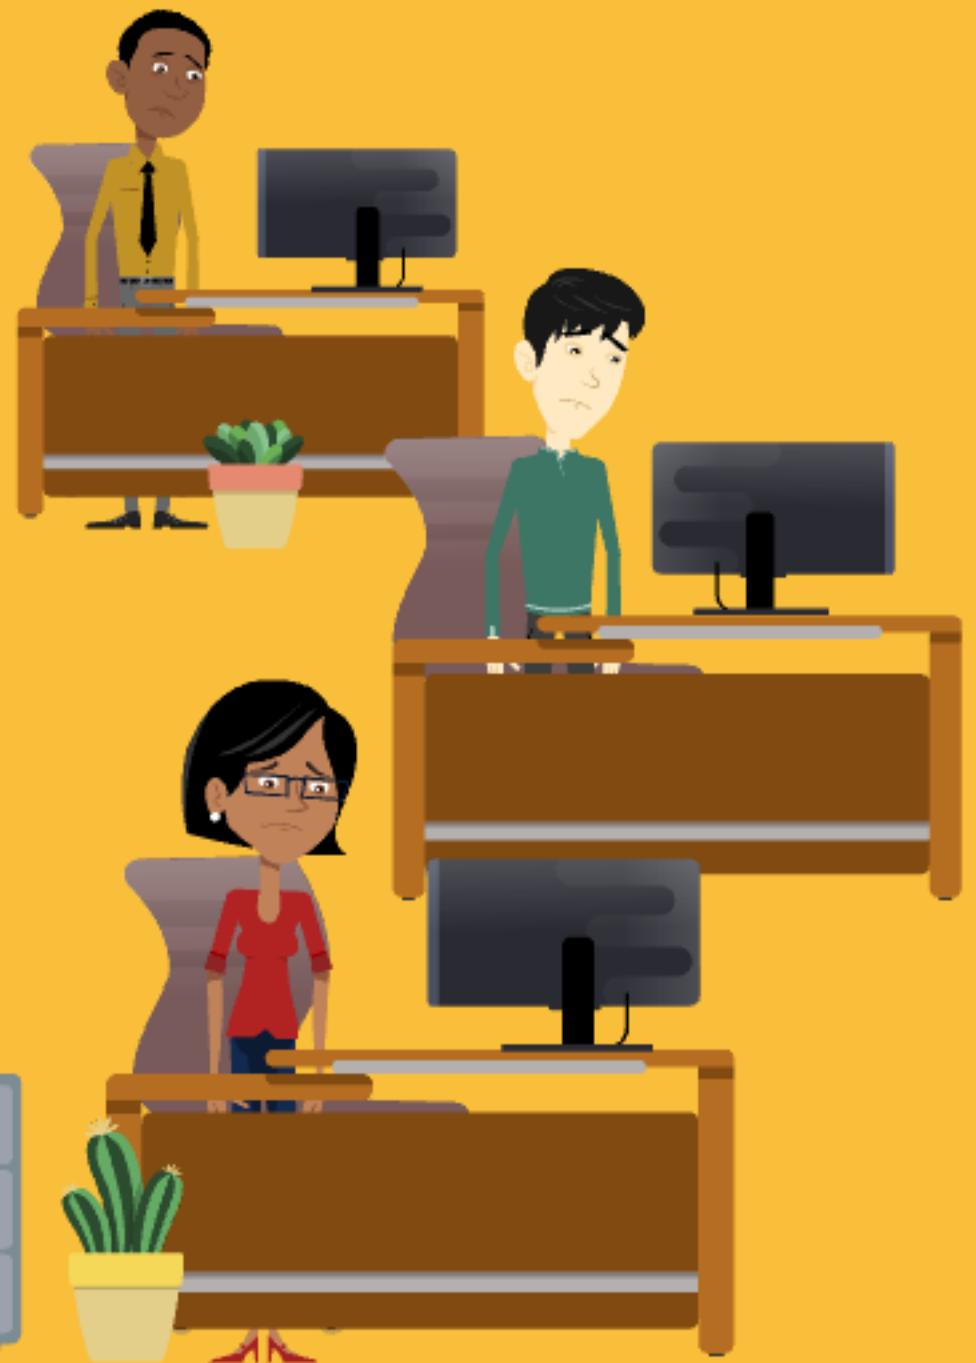

- The scrum scenario gives everyone in the scrum team sufficient room to work to their full potential

● You have to trust them enough to let them do their work the best way they know how most of the time

- Do not overstep your assistance because this might make them think you do not believe they can go it alone

● Respect those and the team will respect your station too

- Be sensitive to everyone's conduct so you easily know when someone thinks you are over-stepping your precincts

In Summary

- As much as possible, give your developers room to complete sprints work without constant interference because working with someone breathing over your shoulder is unpleasant
- Guide them, but leave them alone enough for them to know you know they are capable of doing what they should be doing

In Summary

- As much as possible, give your developers room to complete sprints work without constant interference because working with someone breathing over your shoulder is unpleasant
- Guide them, but leave them alone enough for them to know you know they are capable of doing what they should be doing
- Get to know the members enough to know when you are unintentionally making anyone uncomfortable by being constantly present