Tip 16: Respect Time Boxes

Time Boxes

The aspect of time boxes is an important principle in scrum

In scrum and everywhere else, time limits are in place to protect man against himself

As the Scrum Master, your developers will be watching to see if you adhere to the time-boxes, and how much you rein them in if they do not

As the Scrum Master, your developers will be watching to see if you adhere to the time-boxes, and how much you rein them in if they do not

In Summary

- Aim to always be on time and especially same when facilitating the dev team

- Most people learn by observation; do the right thing and your team will take it from you and go from there

- Respect the small time boxes just as much as you respect the large ones. You cannot impress it upon the team to respect the sprint / delivery time boxes if you do not train them to respect the 15-minute one

In Summary

- Aim to always be on time and especially same when facilitating the dev team

- Most people learn by observation; do the right thing and your team will take it from you and go from there

- Respect the small time boxes just as much as you respect the large ones. You cannot impress it upon the team to respect the sprint / delivery time boxes if you do not train them to respect the 15-minute one